THE South-CAROLINA Gazette.

Containing the freſheſt Advices, Foreign and Domeſtic.

From MONDAY September 2d, to FRIDAY September 13th, 1751.

Mr. Timothy,

If you have room in your Gazette for an extract from the SPECTATOR (whole valuable papers, I fear, are read by few, and remembered by fewer) and think this no improper ſeaſon, pray inſert No. 427, upon SCANDAL, in your next. As I am not the only one that has been lately injured, you will, I preſume, oblige the greater part of your readers, but more particularly Yours, &c.

EMILIA.

Quantùm à rerum turpitudine abes, tantùm Te à verborum libertate ſejunga. TULL.

IT is a certain ſign of an ill heart to be inclined to defamation. They who are harmleſs and innocent, can have no gratification that way; but it ever ariſes from a neglect of what is laudable in a man's ſelf, and an impatience of ſeeing it in another. Elſe why ſhould virtue provoke? why ſhould beauty diſpleaſe in ſuch a degree, that a man given to ſcandal never lets the mention of either paſs by him without offering ſomething to the diminution of it? A lady the other day at a viſit being attacked ſomewhat rudely by one, whoſe own character has been very roughly treated, anſwered a great deal of heat and intemperance very calmly, Good Madam ſpare me, who am none of your Match; I ſpeak ill of no Body, and it is a new Thing to me to be ſpoken ill of. Little minds think fame conſiſts in the number of votes they have on their ſide among the multitude, whereas it is really the inſeparable follower of good and worthy actions. Fame is as natural a follower of merit, as a ſhadow is of a body. It is true, when crowds preſs upon you, this ſhadow cannot be ſeen, but when they ſeparate from around you, it will again appear. The lazy, the idle, and the froward, are the perſons who are moſt pleaſed with the little tales which paſs about the town to the diſadvantage of the reſt of the world. Were it not for the pleaſure of ſpeaking ill, there are numbers of people who are too lazy to go out of their own houſes, and too ill-natur'd to open their lips in converſation. It was not a little diverting the other day to obſerve a lady reading a poſt letter, and at theſe words, after all her airs, he has heard ſome ſtory or other, and the match is broke off, give orders in the midſt of her reading, Put to the Horſes. That a young woman of merit had miſſed an advantageous ſettlement, was news not to be delayed, leſt ſomebody elſe ſhould have given her malicious acquaintance that ſatisfaction before her. The unwillingneſs to receive good tidings is a quality as inſeparable from a ſcandal-bearer, as the readineſs to divulge bad. But, alas, how wretchedly low and contemptible is that ſtate of mind, that cannot be pleaſed but by what is the ſubject of lamentation. This temper has ever been in the higheſt degree odious to gallant ſpirits. The Perſian ſoldier, who was heard reviling Alexander the great, was well admoniſh'd by his Officer; Sir, you are paid to fight againſt Alexander, and not to rail at him.

CICERO in one of his pleadings, defending his client from general ſcandal, ſays very handſomely, and with much reaſon, Though are many who have particular Engagements to the Proſecutor: There are many who are known to have Ill-will to him for whom I appear; there are many who are naturally addicted to Defamation, and envious of any Good to any Man, who may have contributed to ſpread Reports of this kind. For nothing is ſo ſwift as Scandal, nothing is more eaſily ſent abroad, nothing received with more Welcome, nothing diffuſes itſelf ſo univerſally. I ſhall not deſire, that if any Report to our Diſadvantage has any Ground for it, you would overlook or extenuate it: But if there be any thing advanced, without a Perſon who can ſay whence he had it, or which is atteſted by one who forget who told him it, or who had it from one of ſo little conſideration that he did not then think it worth his Notice, all ſuch Teſtimonies as theſe, I know, you will think too ſlight to have any credit againſt the Innocence and Honour of your Fellow-Citizen. When an ill report is traced, it very often vaniſhes among ſuch as the orator has here recited. And how deſpicable a creature muſt that be, who is in pain for what paſſes among ſo frivolous a people? there is a town in Warwickſhire of good note, and formerly pretty famous for much animoſity and diſſenſion, the chief families of which have now turned all their whiſpers, backbitings, envies, and private malices, into mirth and entertainment, by means of a peeviſh old gentlewoman, known by the title of the lady Bluemantle. This heroine had for many years together out-done the whole ſiſterhood of goſſips, in invention, quick utterance, and unprovoked malice. This good body is of a laſting conſtitution, though extremely decayed in her eyes, and decrepid in her feet. The two circumſtances of being always at home from her lameneſs, and very attentive from her blindneſs, make her lodgings the receptacle of all that paſſes in town, good or bad; but for the latter ſhe ſeems to have the better memory. There is another thing to be noted of her, which is, that as it is uſual with old people, ſhe has a livelier memory of things which paſſed when ſhe was very young, than of late years. Add to all this, that ſhe does not only not love any body, but ſhe hates every body. The ſtatue in Rome does not ſerve to vent malice half ſo well, as this old lady does to diſappoint it. She does not know the author of any thing that is told her, but can readily repeat the matter itſelf; therefore, though ſhe expoſes all the whole town, ſhe offends no one body in it. She is ſo exquiſitely reſtleſs and peeviſh, that ſhe quarrels with all about her, and ſometimes in a freak will inſtantly change her habitation. To indulge this humour, ſhe is led about the grounds belonging to the ſame houſe ſhe is in, and the perſons to whom ſhe is to remove, being in the plot, are ready to receive her at her own chamber again. At ſtated times the gentlewoman at whoſe houſe ſhe ſuppoſes ſhe is at the time, is ſent for to quarrel with, according to her common cuſtom: When they have a mind to drive the jeſt, ſhe is immediately urged to that degree, that ſhe will board in a family with which ſhe has never yet been; and away ſhe will go this inſtant, and tell them all that the reſt have been ſaying of them. By this means ſhe has been an inhabitant of every houſe in the place without ſtirring from the ſame habitation; and the many ſtories which every body furniſhes her with to favour the deceit, make her the general intelligencer of the town of all that can be ſaid by one woman againſt another. Thus groundleſs ſtories die away, and ſometimes truths are ſmothered under the general word, when they have a mind to diſcountenance a thing. Oh! that is in my lady Bluemantle's memoirs.

WHOEVER receives impreſſions to the diſadvantage of others without examination, is to be had in no other credit for intelligence than this good lady Bluemantle, who is ſubjected to have her ears impoſed upon for want of other helps to better information. Add to this, that other ſcandal-bearers ſuſpend the uſe of theſe faculties which ſhe has loſt, rather than apply them to do juſtice to their neighbours; and, I think, for the ſervice of my fair readers, to acquaint them, that there is a voluntary lady Bluemantle at every viſit in Town.

SWEDEN.

Stockholm, April 6. This day the Prince Adolphus Frederick was proclaimed King, who in the evening went to the ſenate, where the different colleges of the kingdom were aſſembled, and there ſwore obſervance of and ſigned the following act;

Wereas

WHEREAS the united ſtates of the kingdom of Sweden, of their own entire motion, and by a free and voluntary choice, have elected me ſucceſſor to the kingdom of Sweden, of the Goths, and of the Vandals; I ſhould be wanting in a ſuitable return to the confidence they have repoſed in me, if, on my advancement to the throne which is devolved to me by the diſpoſal of the almighty, and by the free election which they have made of me, I did not, in the moſt ſolemn manner, confirm the aſſurance, I have given to ſupport them, at the expence of my life and blood, in the exerciſe of the pure doctrine and religion they profeſs, and to preſerve and defend the liberties and privileges they have acquired. And as my deſires are far from every thing which might bear the leaſt ſhadow of conſtraint, I declare by this publick act, which I ſwear to obſerve, upon my royal word and faith, that I not only intend to govern my kingdom according to the laws of Sweden, and the form of regency eſtabliſhed in the year 1720, as well as in conformity with the aſſurance I gave the ſtates of the kingdom in the year 1742; but alſo, that I ſhall regard as the moſt dangerous enemies to me and the kingdom, and treat as traitors to their country, all ſuch as ſhall, either in publick or under any pretence ſoever, undertake or endeavour to introduce into this kingdom deſpotic power, or arbitrary government. Wherein God aſſiſt me. (Signed) ADOLPHUS FREDERICK.
